Sterkfontein Caves

Sterkfontein is one of the world's most productive and important anthropological sites and is also a World Heritage Site. It is the place where Dr Robert Broom found the very first adult ape-man in 1936 and where, in 1947, a well-preserved skull of a female Plesianthropus was uncovered. The newspapers named it "Mrs. Ples", and it is the most complete skull of Australopithecus africanus yet found. She is about said to be about 2.7-million years old.
